```
/Este Proyecto Estudia el Concepto de las Uniones (UNIONS)/
///Union Definition
// 1. User-defined Datatype
// 2. A collection of variables stored in the same region of memory
#include <stdio.h>
#include <stdlib.h>
int main() /differencesBetweenStructsAndUnions();/
    moreUsesForUnions();
    return 0;
/Este Procedimiento Aborda las Diferencias entre Estructuras y Uniones/ struct point_struct{ /// In a struct, each element has a separate space in memory
   int x;
                    /// Thus, there are 8 bytes in memory for both integers
(4 bytes each)
   int y;
};
union point_union{ /// In a union, each element points toward the same region in memory
    int x;
                  /// Thus, there are only 4 bytes in memory for both integers (4 bytes each) /// Due to this, when modifying one element, every other element of a union gets modified
};
void differencesBetweenStructsAndUnions()
    struct point_struct point1;
    union point_union point2;
    point1.x = 5;
    point1.y = 10;
    printf("point_struct: (%i,%i) \n", point1.x, point1.y);
    point2.y = 9;
```

```
printf("point_union: (%i,%i) \n", point2.x, point2.y);
    point1.y = 15;
    printf("Despues de modificar --> point_struct: (%i,%i) \n", point1.x, point1.y);
    point2.x = 1;
    printf("Despues de modificar --> point_union: (%i,%i)", point2.x, point2.y);
    printf("\n \n");
/Este Procedimiento Muestra Otros Usos de las Uniones/
#include<stdio.h>
typedef union cPerson{ ///Uso de TYPEDEF con UNIONS
    int ID;
    char cName[20];
}person;
void moreUsesForUnions()
   int f;
    person person1;
    person *pointerToPerson1; ///Podemos usar punteros que guarden la direccion de memoria de una UNION printf("Ingresa el ID: ");
    scanf("%i", &person1.ID);
   fflush(stdin);
    printf("ID ingresado: %i \n", person1.ID);
    pointerToPerson1 = &person1; (*pointerToPerson1).ID = 11; /// Esta es UNA forma de modificar la informacion de la UNION a la que apunta un puntero pointerToPerson1->ID = 12; /// Esta es OTRA forma de modificar la informacion de la UNION a la que apunta un puntero
    printf("Despues de modificar via punteros --> ID ingresado: %i \n", person1.ID);
```

```
printf("\n \n");
    person personArray[5];
    for (f = 0; f < 5; f++)
        printf("Ingresa el ID #%i: ", f + 1);
        scanf("%i", &personArray[f].ID);
        fflush(stdin);
    printf("Impresion de IDs. \n");
    for (f = 0; f < 5; f++)
        printf("\tID #%i: %i\n", f + 1, personArray[f].ID);
    printf("\n \n");
#include<stdio.h>
//Defining the Template
union info{
    char cName[20];
    int age;
};
void definingUnions()
    //Defining a Variable of Type UNION INFO
    union info person1;
    printf("\n \n");
```